Lr. No.DIG/MISC/05 Dated 2.9.2005

Dear Dr. Subramonian,

My Warm Greetings,

I am very happy to receive your letter dated 29th August 2005, and also happy to note that, you are going to create a World Record in delivering lecture under the heading ‘LONGEST LECTURE MARATHON’.

Due to my official commitments, I am unable to participate in this Glorious event, However my wishes and prayers are for the grand success of this unique achievement and I am sure that your glorious achievement will be recorded in GOLDEN LETTERS in the Guinness Book of World records.

Wishing you once again.

With best WISHES,

Yours sincerely,

[BM EZRA]

Dear Thiru. Subramonian,

I appreciate your efforts in attempting to write the longest title of a book on Daniel Radcliffe. The title which carries 1022 words with 4805 characters will definitely draw the attention of any reader irrespective of his / her age and cultural background. Similarly printing 3 D pictures is again a very unique attempt. You deserve appreciation of all book lovers.

I also happily recall your earlier records on teaching 61 hours and 35 minutes and also teaching 1934 students world wide.

Your spirit of creating world records in the field of teaching and learning will create enthusiasm among students all over the world. I hope you will create similar records in future also.

With good wishes.

Yours faithfully,

(Dr. G. THIRUVASAGAM)

Creating records his obsession

Coimbatore, Nov 12: From being principal of a college to Siddha doctor in psychic healing (earlier he worked as a cartoonist for Jana Yugam, a daily in Kerala) he dons different mantles. He is obsessed with creating records for a cause and that keeps him in the limelight.

This time, Subramoniam, principal of Dr R V College of Arts and Science in Karamadai near here, has come out with a book with the longest title in the world.

The book on Daniel Radcliffe, who played school-aged wizard Harry Potter in the movies based on J K Rowling’s series by that name, has its title running to 1022 words. The title starts like this: “Daniel Radcliffe, story of the not-so-ordinary boy chosen from thousands of hopefuls to play the role of Harry Potter...” and ends with “...let many laurels be blessed with his every royal crown of fame.”

He says his objective is to attract youths towards books and reading.

“I think Daniel Radcliffe can be a motivating factor for the younger generation,” he says. The 124-page book has all the needed information on Radcliffe, courtesy the Internet. It has an eight-page full colour 3-D photos with ‘pop-up’ features which the principal claims is his own idea.

Earlier, to attract the younger generation, who are otherwise hooked to IT, towards the teaching profession, he had created a national record for teaching continuously for 61 hours and 35 minutes (Limca Book of Records 2005). It was followed by a Guinness world record in the largest computer class (multiple point) by taking online lessons for 1,934 participants spread across 16 centres in 10 countries in 2006. His webpage says he imparts free meditation and relaxation training to youth at his meditation centre constructed at a cost of Rs 5 lakh at Ganapathy. The temple, which he has constructed in his house, has 19 divine herbs with a lamp. The light is God in the temple, he says. The temple has a painting done of natural herbs depicting a Guru and his followers with one crore dots •ENS
An hour online, on way to Guinness

A college professor takes class for students all over the world

Amutha Kannan

COIMBATORE: Is it possible to teach 1,824 students spread over 15 countries simultaneously? S. Subramonian, principal of R.V. Arts and Science College, made it possible here on Thursday. He was addressing students of the "Largest Computer Class" for an hour from the college premises through a dial-up connection.

In an attempt to enter the Guinness Book of World Records, Prof. Subramonian took an hour long class for the students to break the previous record created by China with 1,185 students. He used his computer to create a virtual classroom with the help of a teaching software known as Conference V2 software.

His students were from Austria, Ecuador, Ghana, Greece, Kuwait, Lithuania, Mexico, Malaysia, Nigeria, Poland, Philippines, Russia, Taiwan, Nepal and the U.S. Closer home, students from Kerala, Harayana and Bangalore participated.

Inaugurated online by G. Thiruvasagam, Vice-Chancellor of Bharathiar University, the class took off at 11 a.m. with Prof. Subramonian giving a lecture to school students on "How to attend an online class?"

He started the class by tracing the beginnings of school education when there were no four walls or a blackboard to the present modern day classroom. He then moved on to explain the nuances involved in studying online. He gave the basics of logging on to the required web site, registering for the specific course and how to proceed from then on.

The class went on for about 50 minutes after which time was given for interaction. Students had queries regarding courses that could be done online and those that could not be done.

One wanted to know whether he could study online from a computer that had a dial-up connection.

The professor responded to their queries for sometime and then it was time for the one-hour limit to end. There was applause and a cheer went up as he logged out. His attempt was through. It would, however, take him two or three days to get the final number of students who attended his virtual class.

"We will send all the relevant documents with the signatures of students who attended the class from all over the world to the Guinness authorities. The confirmation will come within ten days," Prof. Subramonian said.

Speaking on the reason for this attempt, he said: "It is not only for the sake of breaking the record, but also to attract the attention of the younger generation towards the teaching profession. They should understand that information technology could be put to use for teaching online. Online teaching is keeping in pace with information technology."

"For students from the underdeveloped countries this online mode of learning will be very helpful. If a student wants to do a degree or diploma course from Cambridge University, it would cost him thousands of dollars; but the same student can do it online by spending a fraction of that amount. All universities and colleges do not offer all degree courses online. Students should find out and make use of the ones that offer online courses and degrees," he said on a final note.
Talkathon teacher eyes Guinness

BY D DANIEL RAJ

Coimbatore, Sept 2: Lecturing for 72 hours, non-stop! If succeeds, it will take Prof Subramoniam, Principal, SMS College of Arts and Science, into Guinness Book of World Records for the longest lecture-marathon on a single topic. He is on this mission to motivate youngsters in teaching.

It was 6:15 a.m. sharp on Friday, when the first word spilled out of his mouth on Accountancy.

Lecture should be on a single topic as per the rules of Guinness Book. And the audience were none other than his own students.

By the time this paper reaches the readers, he would have completed 24 hours of lecturing.

The current record holder is Eroll E T Muzawazi of Zimbabwe, who spoke on democracy for 62 hours and 30 minutes.

“He lectured on the history of accountancy and its role in our life. It was gentle and thought-provoking,” says Samna Shashidharan, a first B.Com student, who was the first one to listen to him in the lecture-marathon.

He lectures sitting in a cushioned chair in the background of a cupboard, housing scores of books on Accountancy and Commerce. He uses a computer as his tool to teach.

There will be a 15-minutes break, after every eight hours. Apart from natural pauses, lasting not more than 30 seconds between items, the lecture goes on continuously.

Every one hour, a new pair of students will take the seats of audience. Throughout the day, girls will attend the classes and during night, boys will take their turn. “His attempt motivated me. I wanted to become a teacher,” says B.Com student M Muthulakshmi.

The entire process will be observed by two independent witnesses and they will record the details of the attempt in a log book.

The professor delivers the lecture in a gentle and soft voice.

He takes just banana and fruit juice during the permitted 15 minutes break. All the refreshments have to be finished within this break.

“He is explaining the lessons with examples smilingly, which triggers our interest in the subject,” comments another B.Com student B. Latha.

The marathon attempt, if the professor holds his stamina, is to be concluded on Teachers’ Day, on September 5, at 8.15 p.m. Prof N Ramu, Vice-Principal of the college, says, “His effort has to be appreciated. He does it to motivate students in teaching. The whole teaching community should be proud of his attempt.”
Keep listening to this 72-hour lecture!

College principal looks at entering Guinness Book of World Records

COIMBATORE: For students of SMS College of Arts and Science, this will be one lecture that will not be ended by the ringing of the bell.

Their principal, Subramonian, intends to begin his longest lecture at 6 a.m. on Friday, continue all day and all night on Saturday and Sunday, and wind up at 6 a.m. on Monday. If he were successful in his marathon effort, he would have lectured non-stop for a staggering 72 hours!

The lecture marathon would follow the guidelines of the Guinness Book of World Records, under the category of ‘continuous lecturing on a single topic by one person’ before an audience of Prof. Subramonian’s students.

Though there will be no representation from the Guinness team, the event would be monitored and confirmed by independent witnesses. However, no member of the audience would be allowed to attend the lecture for more than four hours at a stretch.

Prof. Subramonian would be allowed natural pauses of 30 seconds and a break of 15 minutes after every eight hours of lecturing. He said he would be attempting the marathon event in front of his students, to motivate young people in the art of teaching.

Eroll E.T. Muzawazi of Zimbabwe holds the current record, having spoken on the subject of democracy for 62 hours and 30 minutes in 2003 while he was a student resident of Politechnika Wrocklawska, Wrocklaw, Poland.
